Heritage Language Learners

There are various reasons schools should offer classes for heritage language learners. One reason that schools should offer classes for heritage language learners is literacy. By having these types of classes in schools, they can have the opportunity to learn properly their home language. For example, they can learn how to write and read. Reading and writing in another language is an essential part of their good education. Another reason that schools should offer classes for heritage language learners is culture. They can learn about the history, traditions, and also food. Heritage language learners need to know more about Mexican culture. For instance, they need more connection with their parents, and the most important they can have a satisfactory communication with them, and other people. It is a tremendous opportunity for heritage language learners to expand their home language because they can help their parents understand and translate papers that their parents don't know how to speak English. In another case, Spanish classes are crucial for heritage language learners and schools should offer for them, and their future. The last, reason that schools should offer classes for heritage language learners is about business. For instance, they can have a better future, obtain an excellent job or they can have many opportunities for being bilingual, and also earn more money. Being bilingual means that there are more jobs opportunities depending on which language. They can travel to other countries without worries. These means that they can communicate with anyone anywhere. In conclusion, schools needs to expand these type of classes to help heritage language learners to improve their home language.
